

Do not leave dinner to 9 pm hunger.

Build a reliable meal decision before meetings take the decision away.

THE IDEA, AT A GLANCE

A useful office meal

01 / Protein

A familiar source that fits your plan and restrictions.

02 / Plants

Fruit or vegetables in a practical form.

03 / Energy

Carbohydrate and fats in portions that fit your plan.

Meal components, not fixed plate proportions or calorie targets.

01 / WHY THIS WORKS

Protein provides amino acids used in tissue repair and adaptation. Total daily intake matters; a supplement is not essential when food can meet your needs.

THE LIMIT OF THE EVIDENCE

The protein position stand concerns healthy exercising adults. It does not give you a personal target or make one meal automatically balanced.

THE LINE TO REMEMBER

Decide dinner while you still have attention to spare.

How late is the evening likely to run?

01 / I know by lunchtime

Choose or pack dinner now. Check the assigned meal first, then use a familiar equivalent that respects your restrictions.

02 / It changed unexpectedly

Order a recognisable protein-led meal with vegetables and a practical carbohydrate. Avoid turning hunger into an all-or-nothing decision.

03 / There is no fridge

Choose suitable shelf-stable options. Perishable food needs proper temperature control; a desk drawer is not a fridge.

03 / IN A REAL WORKING WEEK

Illustrative scenario - not a client result

You usually eat at 7 pm, but a partner adds a 7:30 call.

Useful move: Eat your planned dinner before the call or arrange a suitable delivery in advance.

Why: Timing is organised around work instead of waiting until hunger makes the order harder.

04 / USE THIS TODAY

01 / Keep one trusted order saved.

02 / Make allergies and dietary requirements explicit when ordering.

03 / Use the meal plan as the reference; do not compensate tomorrow.
