

Plan the gaps between meals.

Flights and meetings create long gaps. Solve the gaps before you solve the whole trip.

THE IDEA, AT A GLANCE

Three travel checkpoints

01 / Before

Eat normally; pack an appropriate backup.

02 / During

Use a planned meal or trusted option.

03 / After

Resume the next ordinary meal at your destination.

A meal-access timeline, not a fasting schedule.

01 / WHY THIS WORKS

A sustainable eating pattern includes a variety of foods and accounts for the environment you actually live in. Travel planning is a way to make that pattern easier to follow.

THE LIMIT OF THE EVIDENCE

The specific packing workflow is coaching practice. It has not been shown to guarantee weight loss or prevent fatigue.

THE LINE TO REMEMBER

A dependable fallback beats an elaborate plan you cannot use.

Where is the biggest food gap?

01 / Airport or train

Check a suitable option before leaving. Carry a safe backup that meets your restrictions; do not rely on an unknown lounge menu.

02 / Back-to-back meetings

Put lunch on the calendar and confirm where it will come from. A portable meal may be more realistic than a sit-down lunch.

03 / Hotel evenings

Find one reliable nearby order and one breakfast option. You do not need seven completely different meals.

03 / IN A REAL WORKING WEEK

Illustrative scenario - not a client result

A morning flight is followed immediately by a conference and networking dinner.

Useful move: Arrange lunch in advance and carry a suitable backup. Treat dinner as the next meal, not a reward for eating nothing all day.

Why: Meal access is predictable even when the itinerary is not.

04 / USE THIS TODAY

01 / Locate the longest meal gap in the itinerary.

02 / Prepare one safe backup and one reliable order.

03 / Keep ordinary hydration; do not use hunger as compensation.
